Playing Both Ends:
Amphibian Adapted to
Varied Pressures says
USU Biologist | Biology

Mary-Ann Muffoletto
03/02/2018

A Caecilian is found in tropical climates throughout the world.

Dr. Edmund "Butch Brodie and his colleagues have recently published their findings about Caecilians in an issue of Scientific Reports.

Caecilians are a limbless amphibian that has adapted in unique ways to escape from predators and move. For example, they have glands that secrete mucus that helps the Caecilian move.

Read the article in Utah State Today by Mary-Ann Muffoletto
Read the paper in Scientific Reports